Benchers encourage diversity in candidates seeking office

The Benchers believe that the Law Society's mandate to protect the public interest in the administration of justice is best served by leadership from diverse backgrounds and experience. Diversity that brings the skill and richness of talent reflected in the peoples of British Columbia strengthens our legal community and the community at large. All lawyers who meet the qualifications for Bencher and want to contribute to the governance of the profession are encouraged to stand for election. We particularly encourage Indigenous lawyers, racialized lawyers, LGBTQ2+ lawyers, lawyers with disabilities, young lawyers, and those practising predominantly in solicitors' fields to stand for election, as these groups continue to be underrepresented among elected Benchers. Although the Law Society has achieved, and been enriched by, gender parity among its elected Benchers, it continues to encourage women to stand for election as part of its commitment to achieve leadership that is reflective of the talents and strengths of all British Columbians.

4. Roles and duties of the Benchers

The Benchers are the Law Society's volunteer board of governors. They govern and administer the affairs of the Law Society in accordance with the Legal Profession Act, set and enforce standards of professional responsibility for lawyers, and preside at discipline and credentials hearings.

Benchers can expect their duties to consume approximately seven or eight hours per week, four or five full days a month, or 200 hours per year. This is made up of preparation for and attendance at Bencher meetings, committee, task force or working group meetings, and sitting on hearing panels.

There are usually seven or eight Bencher meetings each year. Meetings take place either in hybrid format in Vancouver, or entirely virtually via Zoom, with the exception of one meeting each year, which is held in conjunction with a weekend retreat at a different location in the province. Bencher meetings are held on Fridays and generally run from 9:00 am to around midday.

In addition to Bencher meetings, all Benchers generally serve on at least two Bencher committees, task forces or working groups. Most committees and task forces meet monthly for 1.5 to 2 hours (generally the day before the Bencher meeting).

For more information on the role of the Benchers, see the Bencher Election page on the Law Society website. Videos of Benchers discussing their role as a Bencher and what to expect are available on this webpage.

At the first Bencher meeting after being elected as a Bencher, the Bencher must take an oath of office in the required form set out in Rule 1-3.
