What is non-practising membership?

Non-practising members retain the same rights as practising members, except the right to practise law or to act as notaries public or commissioners for taking affidavits. Non-practising members are entitled to:

- run for election as Benchers;
- vote in Bencher elections and general meetings of the Law Society; and
- receive Law Society publications.

Who may apply for non-practising membership?

Any member in good standing may become a non-practising member by submitting an undertaking not to engage in the practice of law until released from that undertaking and by paying the application fee and annual non-practising fee: see Law Society Rule 2-3.

A former member must first apply for reinstatement in order to become a non-practising member. If your reinstatement application is satisfactory, you will not be required to meet any conditions of reinstatement other than provision of the non-practising undertaking. If at some point you wish to return to active practice, you will be subject to the Law Society's returning to practice rules. For more information, see the information sheets Reinstatement of Membership and Returning to Practice.

How do I apply for non-practising membership?

To apply for non-practising membership, you should submit the following:

- Application for Non-Practising Membership or the Application for Non-Practising Membership for Reinstating Members; and
- a non-refundable application fee of $73.50 ($70 plus GST) and the annual non-practising fee of $341.25 ($325 plus GST), which is prorated on a monthly basis.

If you are a practising member, do not enclose these fees with your application. They will be deducted from the practising fee you have paid for the year. If the total of the application and non-practising fees is less than the practising fee you have already paid, you will receive a refund for the balance.

Can I be a non-practising member if I engage in legal research?

In February 1994, the Credentials Committee resolved that persons who have been called to the BC bar must maintain their practising status if they wish to engage in legal research or prepare legal documents. The Committee determined that providing opinions is akin to providing legal advice, which constitutes the practice of law under Section 1 of the Legal Profession Act. The definition of the "practice of law" in the Act also includes drawing, revising, or settling a document for use in a proceeding, judicial or extra-judicial, or a document relating in any way to a proceeding under a statute of Canada or British Columbia. Lawyers who provide research and opinion services to insured members and have no client contact whatsoever are exempt from professional liability insurance.

Can I be a non-practising member if the practice of law is incidental to my employment?

Lawyers employed by government, a corporation or other institution should maintain practising status if, in the course of their employment, they engage in activities that fall within the definition of the "practice of law:" see Section 1, Legal Profession Act. These lawyers are not eligible for non-practising membership since they cannot comply with an undertaking not to practise.

There may be situations, however, in which an employed lawyer technically engages in the practice of law, but the activity is incidental to his or her employment. In that case, the lawyer may be eligible for non-practising membership and may be permitted to provide an alternative form of undertaking. If you would like the Credentials Committee to assess your eligibility for non-practising membership, please contact Registration & Licensee Services at the Law Society.

What steps do I need to take to withdraw from practice?

Becoming a non-practising member may trigger Law Society Rules 3-79 and 3-87 with regard to trust reports, disposition of files, trust monies and other documents and valuables. Please read these rules to determine whether you will be required to take any steps prior to becoming a non-practising member.

The Practice Support section of the Law Society website at www.lawsociety.bc.ca includes resources to assist in the process of withdrawing from practice, including:

- Winding up a Firm: A Checklist;
- Winding up a Sole Practice: A Checklist; and
- Withdrawal from the Practice of Law: sample newspaper notice and letter to clients.

Will I need to requalify on returning to practice?

If you apply to be released from your non-practising undertaking, you will be subject to the Law Society's returning to practice rules. The conditions of returning to practice vary depending on the length of time you have been engaged in the practice of law and the period of time you have been absent from practice. Please see the information sheet Returning to Practice for more information on conditions upon return to practice.

Is membership with the Canadian Bar Association optional?

Membership in the Canadian Bar Association (CBA) is optional for all Law Society members, including non-practising members. If you would like to change your membership status with the CBA, contact the BC Branch office at 604.687.3404.
