What is retired membership?

Retired members retain the same rights as practising members, except the right to practise law or to act as notaries public or Commissioners for taking affidavits. Retired members are entitled to:

- run for election as Benchers;
- vote in Bencher elections and general meetings of the Law Society; and
- receive Law Society publications.

Who may apply for retired membership?

A member in good standing who has done one or more of the following qualifies to become a retired member:

- reached the age of 55 years;
- been a member in good standing for 20 of the previous 25 years;
- engaged in the full-time active practice of law for 20 of the previous 25 years.

A former member must first apply for reinstatement in order to become a retired member. If your reinstatement application is satisfactory, you will not be required to meet any conditions of reinstatement other than provision of an undertaking. If at some point you wish to return to practice, you will be subject to the Law Society's returning to practice rules. For more information, see the information sheets Reinstatement of Membership and Returning to Practice.

If you qualify for retired membership, you may become a retired member by submitting an undertaking not to engage in the practice of law until released from that undertaking and by paying the application fee and annual retired member fee: see Law Society Rule 2-4.

How do I apply for retired membership?

To apply for retired membership, you should submit the following:

- Application for Retired Membership or the Application for Retired Membership for Reinstating Members; and
- a non-refundable application fee of $36.75 ($35, plus GST) and the annual retired member fee of $131.25 ($125, plus GST), which is prorated on a monthly basis.

If you are a practising member, do not enclose these fees with your application. They will be deducted from the practising fee you have paid for the year. If the total of the application and retired member fees is less than the practising fee you have already paid, you will receive a refund for the balance.

Can I be a retired member if I engage in legal research?

In February 1994, the Credentials Committee resolved that persons who have been called to the BC bar must maintain their practising status if they wish to engage in legal research or prepare legal documents. The Committee determined that providing opinions is akin to providing legal advice, which constitutes the practice of law under section 1 of the Legal Profession Act. The definition of the "practice of law" in the Act also includes drawing, revising, or settling a document for use in a proceeding, judicial or extra-judicial, or a document relating in any way to a proceeding under a statute of Canada or British Columbia. Lawyers who provide research and opinion services to insured members and have no client contact whatsoever are exempt from professional liability insurance.

What steps do I need to take to withdraw from practice?

Becoming a retired member may trigger Law Society Rules 3-79 and 3-87 with regard to trust reports, disposition of files, trust monies and other documents and valuables. Please read these Rules to determine whether you will be required to take any steps prior to becoming a retired member.

The Practice Support section of the Law Society website at lawsociety.bc.ca includes resources to assist in the process of withdrawing from practice, including:

- Winding up a Firm: A Checklist;
- Winding up a Sole Practice: A Checklist; and
- Withdrawal from the Practice of Law: sample newspaper notice and letter to clients.

Will I need to requalify on returning to practice?

If you apply to be released from your retired member's undertaking, you will be subject to the Law Society's returning to practice rules. The conditions of returning to practice vary, depending on the length of time you have been engaged in the practice of law and the period of time you have been absent from practice. Please see the information sheet Returning to Practice for more information on conditions upon return to practice.

Is membership with the Canadian Bar Association optional?

Membership in the Canadian Bar Association is optional for all Law Society members, including retired members. If you would like to change your membership status with the CBA, contact the BC Branch office at 604.687.3404.
